For four (4) years I suffered terribly with womanly troubles, and I found no relief in different medicines which I took. Finally I began to take Cardui, the woman's tonic, and after taking six bottles I am completely cured. I feel like a different person altogether. All the pains are gone, and I am in better health than I have been in for four years. Have gained a great deal in weight.

I hope this letter will induce other poor, suffering women to try Cardui, for it is the best medicine in the world for women."

If you suffer from any of the numerous ailments so common to all women, why not take this lady's advice and try Cardui? It has helped her, as well as a million other women, in the past half century. Why shouldn't it do the same for you? We feel sure it will.

MEDALS PROVIDED
FOR GREEK SOLDIERSKing Constantine Will Honor
Men Who Fought His Battles.

BY LA MARQUISE DE FORTENOX.

So many Greeks who now make their home on this side of the Atlantic returned to their native land in order to take part in the successive wars against Turkey and against Bulgaria that it may be of interest to call attention to the royal decree just promulgated at Athens, bearing the signature of King Constantine, and providing for the bestowal of medals upon all those who have borne arms in these two conflicts.

They have been designed by Jacobids, the dean of Greek artists, and are now being struck in bronze at Paris, where work of this kind is now in the hands of the best workmen in the world. The medal for the campaign against the Turks will be worn on the left breast, suspended by a ribbon of the Greek colors, that is to say, blue and white, with a thin red line in the middle, recalling the color of the Turkish flag. The medal bears on the obverse the Greek cross, surmounted by two crossed swords. Underneath the cross are the names of King George and King Constantine. The whole is surrounded by a laurel wreath and an inscription in Greek of the words: "With God's help, for King and country." On the reverse are engraved the names of the conquered provinces of Thrace and Macedonia.

The other medal, namely, that for the campaign against the Bulgars, bears on the obverse the profile of King Constantine, and the famous verse of Homer: "The sweat of all ages is the light for the fatherland."

Around the border are the words "Konstantinos Basileus," and the date, 1913. On the reverse of the medal is the profile of the Greek Emperor Basilus II, Bulgaroktonos (the Bulgar-Killer), who died in A. D. 1025, after waging lifelong and successful warfare against the Bulgars and other Slav nations in the Balkans. The ribbon is equally symbolic, consisting of vertical stripes of the Bulgarian national colors, white, red and green, cut across by the blue of the Greeks.

This particular medal cannot fail to keep alive the intense racial hatred which has existed for nearly a thousand years between the Greeks and the Bulgars, and conveys promise of many a battle still to come. The medal and the ribbon, in one word, are bound to act upon a Bulgarian as a rearguard, plainly signifying, as they do, the defeat of the Bulgars by the Greeks.

Every Greek in the United States and Canada who has taken part in the war against the Bulgars, whether as an officer, and who has received an honorable discharge, is entitled by the royal decree to these two medals, in recognition of his patriotic services to his King and to his native land.

Every one of the newspaper articles in this country and abroad, dealing with the recent death of the octogenarian Emperor (Olivier), the last Prime Minister of Napoleon III., has recalled his famous phrase, uttered during the course of his speech to the national legislature, announcing the proclamation of war against Prussia in 1870, namely, "It is with a light heart (avec le coeur léger) that we accept the responsibility." These words have always been treasured against Olivier as illustrative of the frivolity and recklessness with which he caused France to embark upon that, to her, so disastrous struggle, which robbed her of two of her most prosperous provinces, namely, Alsace and Lorraine.

There is a considerable amount of interest in this imputation. Taken by themselves, the words are certainly unobjectionable. But when taken with the context of his speech, their meaning is entirely different. What he added was, "Do not think that I mean to say 'with joy.' I have already told you my sorrow at having been compelled to declare war. What I mean to say is that we accept the responsibility with a heart unburdened by remorse, with a heart that is content, because the war which we shall wage is one which has been forced upon us; because we have done all that was honorably and humanly possible in order to avoid it; and, finally, and so on, because the war which we shall wage is the French army."

This gives an entirely different sense to the phrase. Moreover, the French word "leger," used in the sense of "Premier Olivier on that occasion, bears the meaning of "light," "light-hearted," and "without serious thought."

Thus, Little's definition of the word "leger," in his celebrated standard dictionary, is as follows: "Qui n'accable pas par un poids moral." (Unburdened by a moral weight.)

Emile Olivier's solitary tomb on the very point of the rocky promontory of his place on the Riviera, reaching out into the Mediterranean, bears only the words: "Magna quies, in magna spe." (Great quietude in great hope.) It is his eldest son, Daniel Olivier, an eminent member of the Paris bar, by his first marriage, in 1857, with Blandine, natural daughter of the famous composer who died as the Abbe Lasz, and of the Comtesse d'Artois, with whom he had eloped. Another daughter of this illegitimate union is Mme. Cosima Wagner, widow of Richard Wagner, the composer. After the death of his first wife, Emile Olivier married in 1862, Mme. Gravier, daughter and heiress of a rich merchant of Marseilles, by whom he has left two children, namely, Genevieve, married to a physician, Dr. Troisier, and Emile, who is, like his elder half brother, a lawyer, and about thirty years of age.

Young Baron Eric von Goldschmidt-Rothschild, who is now traveling in this country, and who was recently laid up in Chicago by illness, is one of the sons of Baron Maximilian Goldschmidt, who married for his second wife, Rothschild, daughter of Baron William Rothschild, inherited from the latter the chieftainship of the Frankfort branch of the great house of Rothschild. Six years ago Baron von Goldschmidt-Rothschild, after having conferred upon Maximilian Goldschmidt the title of baron, and the authorization to use his wife's name in conjunction with his own.

Young Eric von Goldschmidt-Rothschild, now traveling in America, has an elder brother, Albert, who has become quite a conspicuous figure in the London world. Some years ago he passed all the necessary examinations and received his commission as an officer of cavalry in the German army, but when assigned to the Twentieth Dragon Regiment, the officers of that corps blackballed him. The Emperor was very angry with his officers for turning down young Goldschmidt; but he could do nothing, as he is as long as an officer of the German army, and is allowed to virtually ballot candidates who wish to join their regiment, so long as the exclusion of Jews from the commissioned ranks of regiments of the German army is likely to continue.

The Kaiser subsequently endeavored to compensate Albert von Goldschmidt-Rothschild by appointing him to a secretaryship of the German embassy in London, where he has managed to make himself very popular. During the past season he has been the particular crony of the Crown Prince of the Grand Duchy of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, and whenever the latter was not staying at Windsor Castle with his cousins, King George and Queen Mary, he has been the guest of young Goldschmidt-Rothschild. During the Cowes regatta they were always together, the grand duke making his headquarters on board the yacht "Narcissus," which the baron had chartered for the season.

Recently the baron has rented Castle Ashby, the beautiful place of Lord Northampton, in the Midlands. It is famous for the balustrade which runs around the entire edge of the roof, and which is constructed of great stone letters, so placed as to show verses from the Gospels, the same form of decoration being repeated in the stately terraces with which the gardens are adorned.

Both of the young Goldschmidt-Rothschilds, namely, Baron Albert and his brother, Eric, now over here, have inherited some of the musical talent and tastes of their maternal grandfather, Baroness Willy von Rothschild. Her name is famous in the world of music by reason of the charming songs which she composed, and of still others which were devoted to her. She was the most intimate friend of old Prince Bismarck, wife of the Iron Chancellor, and until the close of her life the princess was in the habit of spending each year a fortnight at Frankfort with the baroness.

RAISE EFFICIENCY
OF STANDING ARMYSecretary Garrison Suggests
Shorter Enlistment and Vocational Training.

Washington, September 15.—"I don't believe the army was ever in better condition," said Secretary Garrison, when he returned to his desk at the War Department to-day, after an inspection tour of two months. "If we are going to attract the men, and want to raise the efficiency of the army, we must have a shorter term of enlistment," he said. "I am in favor of a three-year term, with the privilege of discharge into the reserve as soon as an enlisted man proves his efficiency. I have not decided what the shortest period of service with the colors should be."

Secretary Garrison said he had not yet decided what period a discharged soldier should serve in the reserve.

"I favor longer training for the army," he continued, "so that, in addition to the military training and discipline which a man would acquire through service, he would leave with some trade when he goes again into civil life. Wherever I went I found universal approval of this plan."

Mr. Garrison said he does not favor nor would the country tolerate a large standing army. He declined to discuss plans for concentration of the army in a few strategic centers, instead of having it distributed throughout 157 posts in unimportant locations.

HURRICANE WARNINGS
SAVE MANY VESSELS

Despite Increase in Shipping Activity of Department of Agriculture Reduces Number of Wrecked Vessels.

Washington, September 15.—Hurricane warnings issued by the United States Weather Bureau have resulted in a marked decrease in shipwrecks in recent years, despite the great increase in shipping. This is the declaration of the Department of Agriculture, which to-day called the attention of mariners to the fact that the season of tropical storms has been through wireless reports of wind, weather and pressure conditions from vessels plying in the Gulf and Caribbean waters, and from a number of land stations of the bureau in the West Indies.

"The work thus being done," it is declared, "is of greater importance than ever before, in view of the increase of ocean traffic that is destined to follow the opening of the Panama Canal in the near future."

"During the last thirty-five years," the statement adds, "about 88 per cent of the vessels wrecked have occurred during the months of August, September and October—September showing a slightly greater number than any of the others."
